I believe this farce has gone on long enough. The states do not have the right to tell a company how to run their company. The only winners are the attorneys etc. The losers are people who use microsoft products. the states want to weaken the company, most articles & polls that I have seen that the majority of computer people say that the government and the states was wrong to sue MS MS has developed many improvments to PC operations, thru their R & D departments, why should they share that info to other competitors, let them spend their own money for new products. Is MS perfect, probaly not. Over all it has been a good company, they created thousands of jobs, and made a lot money for people. Weak companies don't survive. I think you get the picture.
